Dr. Jessica Dean is a Public Health Policy & Programs Manager with the National Indian Health Board (NIHB) where she leads national initiatives on Tribal public health capacity and performance/systems improvements. She works closely with Tribal public health departments and national public health organizations, coordinating learning communities, resources, and stakeholder engagement for program efficiency and advancement toward national accreditation recognition.

Dr. Dean currently spearheads NIHB's national Tribal assessment and environmental scan on the state of public health programming, services, workforce, and capacity in Indian Country. She is a 2014 and 2016 graduate of Tuskegee University where she received Bachelor's degrees in Biology and Food & Nutritional Sciences and a Master in Public Health.

During her time at Tuskegee, she was a member of the Marching Crimson Piper Band (MCP), Tau Beta Sigma National Honorary Band Sorority, President of the Tuskegee University Section of the National Council of Negro Women (NCNW), the Tuskegee University Public Health Association, and the Alpha Xi Zeta Chapter of Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. Dr. Dean earned a Doctorate in Public Health from Walden University. She is also a loving wife and mother.
